In a multi-core processor, it is desirable to efficiently allocate hardware resources, such as data and instruction caches, branch prediction buffers, translation lookaside buffers (TLBs), registers, out-of-order queue support, etc., among all the processing cores to maximize core utilization. Many systems start with a general allocation of hardware resources to multiple processing cores and optimize the allocation later. One known approach is to start with a single allocation and then attempt to improve allocation after insertion of test instructions in an instruction stream. If the attempt is successful, the allocation is declared a "convergence". This approach fails to identify a potential optimization that would be revealed if the allocation is poor. Other known optimization approaches are based on explicit programmer inputs and produce a fixed set of optimization states. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of controlling electric power generation, and to a circuit of a power supply. More particularly, the invention relates to a method of controlling power supply voltage and to a circuit of a power supply, by which the power supply voltage increases in accordance with electric power consumption. 2. Related Art A power supply for a variety of devices is required to be of high reliability, and it is becoming increasingly difficult to manufacture a power supply in consideration of future environmental problems. For instance, power supplies are manufactured in consideration of hazardous and environmentally polluting materials, and power supplies have become increasingly compact and inexpensive. Therefore, there are increasing demands to design a power supply in consideration of such an environment. For a compact power supply, it is important that a power supply has a large capacity. In order to increase the capacity of a power supply, it is necessary that the power supply be capable
