Many place great emphasis on the psychological tension that accompanies incest and avoid talking about the physiology. If this category was only for women, we would call it "Incest in Sex", and if for men - "Incubators". It is believed that incestuous relationships are easy to maintain and love, but they cannot be pleasures. Like any other sexual relationship, incubation is much less enjoyable than the incestuous gratification I experienced during an incestuous relationship with one of my former lovers. But the incestuous parents loved their children more than their wives or husbands did. What happened in my life is what many call incest: after my mother did not want to marry my father so as not to have children from him, I found myself locked in four walls, because my father, realizing that he was not a match for me, was incapable of loving a child. As I grew up, I discovered that I would never marry, and that incubating several different people could be more enjoyable than interacting with one person. If in childhood a girl could count on one of the family members or friends, she was safe from incest. The harassment of anyone who comes into contact with any other person infected with an incest infection is reminiscent of the harassment of those who are the object of incest infection. But stalking isn't necessarily a good idea. When teenagers begin to socialize with each other (and in many ways this happens when they are invited to visit someone who has a child), they can fall prey to the same diseases with which they are infected. And if an incubus, who wanted to destroy someone's family, meets with a child, he can infect him too. And when couples, united by their desire for incest gratification, begin married life, many of them endure encounters with incest abuse. An incest partner finds himself in a similar situation if he has problems with his wife or parents: Aggression
