Appellees insist that these agreements "were executed after the limitations period had expired." R. at 19. This is a little harder to swallow than the previous argument. Appellees do not specify what "expired" limitations period they are referring to, but the most reasonable inference is that they are alluding to the one-year period for filing a lawsuit. Appellees insist that the agreements were executed in 1985 and 1986 and that Gantt did not file this suit until December 1991. A fair reading of the complaint indicates that Gantt sued appellees over the discriminatory treatment he received while he was in the Navy from 1966 to 1970. Thus, he was well within the period for filing. 9 Appellees insist, however, that the complaint does not state a case of continuing discrimination. To do this they point to Gantt's performance on the Civil Service Exam, which they say is a good indication of his level of performance over a four-year period, and the fact that he received merit ratings on the promotional examinations, which, appellees assert, is further evidence of his ability. Appellees also argue that the circumstances surrounding Gantt's resignation from the New York Police Department demonstrate that
