Glucose-6-phosphate dehydrogenase (G6PD) is the only known enzyme in mammalian cells to catalyze the first, rate-limiting step of the pentose phosphate pathway (PPP). This enzyme is a heterotetramer with a large catalytic subunit and a small regulatory subunit. In humans, four G6PD phenotypes have been defined by their kinetic properties. The most common of these is G6PD Mediterranean, which is deficient in the oxidation of NADP(H), resulting in an impaired ability to withstand oxidative stress. Because oxidative stress is known to occur in leukemias and lymphomas, it was of interest to examine the incidence of G6PD deficiency in cases of acute myelogenous leukemia (AML) and acute lymphocytic leukemia (ALL). Of the 54 patients with AML or ALL, 16 had G6PD activity below 50% of the normal mean. The mean +/- SD G6PD activity in AML (N = 26) was 97 +/- 7% and in ALL (N = 28) was 99 +/- 2%. Of the 16 G6PD-deficient patients, 12 were females, three were male, and one of them was a 3-month-old infant. No sex-based difference in incidence of G6PD deficiency was found. Patients with ALL had a significantly lower incidence of G6PD deficiency (P = .03) than did patients with AML. All the G6PD-deficient patients were treated with the hematopoietic growth factors GM-CSF, G-CSF, or GM-CSF/G-CSF in a daily dose of 3 micrograms/kg per day. Patients who are G6PD-deficient have a normal blast count at the onset of therapy with hematopoietic growth factors and are able to respond normally to the hematopoietic growth factors as demonstrated by the normalization of the peripheral blood counts. This study shows that G6PD deficiency occurs at a rate of 16% in a population of patients with AML or ALL. The frequency of G6PD deficiency is similar in AML and ALL and is not associated with sex. If you have the Bay Mobile app on your cell phone, you'll be able to check the latest scores, look at the local weather, see how traffic is looking in your area, and get alerts for your favorite team's games, as well as other events. The Bay Mobile app is available for free at the Apple App Store or Google Play Store. It works in conjunction with mySisterSite.com and mySFGate.com, so you will only see those three sites on your mobile device. As always, there is no data plan or usage fees involved. The Bay Mobile is simple to use. The user interface is very similar to that of mySisterSite.com and mySFGate.com, and it is easy to navigate. The icons will appear on your mobile device as either a dot or as a star. Clicking the dot icon opens up the icon in a new browser window. Clicking the star icon puts the icon on the home screen and opens up the same page as the dot. You can then click on the star icon and read the text that is displayed when the icon is clicked.
