MX Skype Recorder is an easy to configure Windows application developed for the recording of Skype calls, while also providing support for a couple of other VoIP programs. The program has been designed with a single goal in mind: record your call on Skype and save the content in MP3 or WMA format on your local disks. While it also provides a powerful compression engine to make sure the recordings don't require too much space on your computer, MX Skype Recorder comprises two different recording modes: manual or automatic. It's pretty obvious that the manual mode needs to be started by the user every time he/she wants to record a call, but the automatic system is much more advanced and can start and stop the recording without user input. As said, the program also works with a bunch of other VoIP applications, including Yahoo Messenger, Google Talk or Windows Live Messenger, so you need to define their executable files in the settings screen. Another good feature of MX Skype Recorder is the hotkey support that thus enhances the manual recording mode, while the password protection system makes sure that no one can access your previously recorded calls. With a very clean and intuitive interface, MX Skype Recorder remains a resource friendly application and it doesn't hamper system performance in any way. It works with all versions of Skype, but older Yahoo Messenger releases are not supported. All in all, MX Skype Recorder is one of the easiest ways to record Skype calls and the automatic mode is outstanding. It can automatically start and stop a recording when you initiate and terminate a call, so user input is in most cases close to zero.
