ALIAS" The present invention relates to a system for reducing moisture in a treated composite material, and to a process for producing the system. The invention is especially suitable for the treatment of a pre-impregnated cardboard.

In the manufacture of furniture, most often a cardboard is used as a core, which is covered with a synthetic or plastic material to manufacture a furniture piece.

The synthetic or plastic material is wrapped around the cardboard. However, since the cardboard is porous, moisture in the cardboard evaporates, which makes the composite material moist. The emission of moisture from the cardboard tends to increase with time. In order to prevent the emission of moisture from the composite material, it is often wrapped with a film, which prevents the emission of moisture. The moisture enters the composite material through a film-covered hole in the cardboard, which is usually produced at the time of wrapping. The hole normally stays open for several weeks, until the film has sufficiently compressed the cardboard and the hole is closed. In the compressed state the film covers the hole with no possibility of water being emitted from the hole. Such a system has many disadvantages. First of all, the film is somewhat expensive, since it has to be applied on the cardboard before impregnation of the cardboard. Secondly, the film is only suitable for a single film-covering operation. The film is only suitable for the initial treatment of the composite material. Once the composite material has been treated with a film, it is no longer free of moisture. It is an object of the present invention to provide a system for reducing moisture in a treated composite material, which is inexpensive and which is suitable for several film covering operations. A Morning Consult survey released Wednesday indicated support among likely voters for three presidential candidates who rarely see much competition in the early states: Hillary Clinton, Bernie Sanders, and Donald Trump. But while most respondents said they had a positive opinion of Clinton, Mr. Trump was the only candidate among those tested who received mixed ratings, with 46 percent of the people who answered said they had a positive opinion of him. Majorities in all three of the country's most competitive states said they had an unfavorable view of Mr. Trump. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox Other national data released on Wednesday found that Trump's favorability ratings have now fallen to their lowest level in the 2016 campaign, and CNN is now finding that voters consider Clinton's performance as a risky proposition if elected. The news network's poll also found that Sanders and Clinton are leading in hypothetical general election match-ups. Sanders has a 50 percent to 36 percent lead over Clinton, while Trump trails Clinton by a similar 47 percent to 37 percent margin. The survey of 1,823 registered voters was conducted from February 9-12 and includes a margin of error of plus or minus 2 percentage points. Trump, Clinton's centrist Democratic rival in the primaries, continues to lead in national polls ahead of Indiana's primary on May 3. And despite a "fix" reportedly being worked on by the Republican National Committee to stop it, Indiana is still on track to be Trump-free. But late Tuesday the Washington Post reported that Trump's favorability ratings dropped with his supporters following the Indiana primary. It is more evidence of the level of distrust and skepticism GOP voters have for their
