Ask HN: Which 2012 hacker conference are you most looking forward to? - SiddharthaS Having attended/studied/worked in several conferences in the past, this time I'm looking forward to the YC Fair which has a lot of strong (and very good) startups that are doing cool stuff. It's being held from 12th to 15th of this month, and I'm hoping to go there. ===== nostrademons It'll be interesting to see what happens to I'm sure it'll be good, but Unconference is the big draw for me. A lot of what they do is to get out of the noisy, small conference world and just have some grass-roots conversation with people. That alone, I think, is priceless. ----- SiddharthaS Since we are having several responses, I'm open to any other suggestions too, i.e. non-YC startups. :) Q: ASP.NET MVC Routing with local resources For a application, you're often able to use "~/Controller/{Action}/{ID}" to route to a controller/action. However, I am running into an issue where I have to use local resources (images, JavaScript and CSS). I know I can map all of these in global.asax. But it sounds like a bad idea to have so much code in the global.asax. Is there a way to use something like "~/Content/images/{image path}" to load images from the server? A: There is a way, you could use the following route in a controller: public ActionResult GetImage(string imageName) { //your code to return a byte[] here return File(imageBytes, "image/png"); } You can do something similar with JavaScript and CSS files, by including them with a unique file name. Hope this helps. #prag
